FEW men have the opportunity of making a thorough study of so many different kinds of business, as has the Printer.

The Printer is inseparably linked with most business activities—he gets to know the purpose, plans and policies of his customers. He knows the use and purpose of printing as well as its production from a mechanical viewpoint.

The Printer sees many small businesses grow from a modest start to where they become leaders in their field. He gleans an insight into every kind of business that few men in other lines can obtain.

Do you think of your Printer only as a source of supply—or also as a source of business information? Do you make use of the fund of information he has acquired—a knowledge that can be immeasurably helpful to you in building your business?

Every piece of printing you buy is purchased because you want it to help build your business—therefore it should be studied both by yourself and by your Printer to see if it is exactly what you need to produce results.
